EDWIN GREENLAW, University of North Carolina

WM. H. ELSON, Author of The Elson Readers

CHRISTINE KECK, Head Union Junior High School English, Grand Rapids, Michigan

Cloth

592 pages

List Price $1.80

The first of a series of literatures for the senior high school. An attempt to provide within the covers of one book for each year a minimum content in literature study for the year.

The North Central Association and Uniform Entrance Requirements in Literature are recognized fully.

The book is more than a collection of unabridged classics; it is a course so organized that the literature is utilized to give a broader view of life problems.

"If we can't save the teaching of English through books of this kind it doesn't deserve to be saved."—C. M. FUESS, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.

"It is the very best thing of its kind I have seen, and should make a tremendous appeal to those teachers who are looking for live things to give their classes."—W. B. ELWELL, Crosby High School, Waterbury, Conn.

"The contemporary note makes the book particularly valuable for English classes of the last year."—A. GOLDSTEIN, New Utrecht High School, Brooklyn, N.Y.

"We shall use Morley's Essays in our senior class next year. It is the most attractive book of modern essays I have seen, and the price is reasonable."—BARBARA E. PHILLIPS, High School, Albuquerque, N.M.

"It is an admirable collection which I shall certainly use."—HELEN L. COHEN, Washington Irving High School, New York City

"Morley's book has a quality which meets with instant approval. I am eager to try it in the classroom."—WARD H. GREEN, Central High School, Tulsa, Okla.

Teaching English Today

THE teaching of English literature and composition has, during the past few years, taken tremendous strides forward. What subject has more consistently striven to throw off the shackles of rote learning? Not so long ago we were wholly concerned with facts about authors and masterpieces, with principles and rules of rhetoric. Today, while these are by no means neglected, the major emphasis is placed upon the masterpieces themselves, upon the practical application of rules and theories.

Our aim is now to awaken in the student an appreciation of literature, to develop in him honesty, originality, and power of self-expression. In order to do this, wide reading, wise reading is absolutely necessary. But, if the student must depend upon libraries or buy for himself separate editions of the classics, such study becomes impossible.

It is to meet this difficult situation that the anthologies here described have been designed. These texts provide adequate opportunity for the teaching of English in accordance with the best of modern methods and developments. They represent courses of study which, both from the teacher's standpoint and from the point of view of the student of today, have proved successful.

Modern Essays and Stories

By

FREDERICK H. LAW

Editor of Modern Short Stories

12mo. 314 pages

A book of essays, a book of stories, and a book of composition work all in one volume. Material of vital interest to the pupil is linked with exercise work and discussion in such a novel fashion that the drudgery of English composition work, both for teacher and student, is greatly reduced.

The essays are short, thoroughly representing the modern point of view, and only stories that have an instinctive appeal for the student of today are included. There are numerous original helps for teachers and students, such as analyses of the selections, suggestive questions, subjects for written imitation, directions for writing, etc.

Century Readings in American Literature

By

FRED L. PATTEE

8vo. 1012 pages

This is an anthology of American literature.

Beginning with the writings of Captain John Smith in the Colonial Period, the book traces the evolution of American literary art through to the present day. Every era of American history has been touched and every selection has been chosen with a view to its fitness for class use, as well as its literary excellence.

It is impossible to note the names of the authors—there are over 130 of them—or to list the variety of literary types represented. Suffice it to say, the book contains more copyright material than any similar collection. The most complete anthology in its field.

FOR FALL USE

Neilson and Thorndike: A HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

A book that shows literature as a living thing

IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF HUMAN THOUGHT:

By tracing the history of the chief types of literature—the novel, the epic, the drama—both to account for modern tendencies in form and treatment, and to show the periodic rise and wane of literary movements.

IN THE CAREERS OF MEN OF LETTERS:

By bringing out in penetrating and deft character sketches the close relation between the lives of great writers and the distinguishing features of their work.

IN THE LIVES OF YOUNG READERS TO-DAY:

By making possible the keenest understanding and appreciation on the part of the pupil of the best in English prose and poetry through the text's careful organization and thematic development, together with:

1. Chronological outlines of English and foreign literature and history to give the proper perspective to the narrative.
2. Suggestions for further reading and composition.
3. Remarkably good illustrations—portraits, facsimiles of first editions, old prints.
4. A literary map of England.

Gayley, Young, and Kurtz: ENGLISH POETRY

Selections from the best and most representative English poets from Chaucer to Noyes. No other school anthology contains so many examples of Georgian and war poetry, or shows so well the scope and importance of the poetical renaissance of the century. Helpful aids to study of the text are found in the Introduction and Notes.

THE MACMILLAN POCKET CLASSICS SERIES

Nearly two hundred volumes, carefully edited, uniform in binding and in their moderate price. This Series brings within the reach of every booklover the masterpieces of English literature. The titles include practically all those recommended by the College Entrance Board in its comprehensive list—a fact which we think will be of special interest to teachers of English.
